THE COMPLETE RECORD

They Keep Burying Bitcoin.

Every time the media declared Bitcoin dead since 2010, and the exact price the day they said it. 550 obituaries, one honest scoreboard.

550

death calls logged since 2010

91%

were made BELOW today's price, mid-crash

16

straight years it was declared dead

Compiled July 13, 2026 from the public 99bitcoins.com and bitcoindeaths.com trackers, de-duplicated, with every price re-checked against our own daily close. Bitcoin ~$62,708, down 50% from its $126,272 high. Not financial advice.

What 550 obituaries actually tell you

THE SCOREBOARD

For fifteen years, every time Bitcoin dropped, the headlines wrote it off. Nobel-winning economists, big-bank CEOs, the Washington Post. We pulled every one we could verify and lined it up against the price on the day it ran. Here is what the record shows, and where it does not say what people think.

91%

of all 550 death calls were written below where Bitcoin trades today, even with it cut in half.

67%

of the time, buying on a death call and waiting two years put you in profit (median about +100%).

26

fresh obituaries in this crash alone, since the October 2025 high. They never stopped.

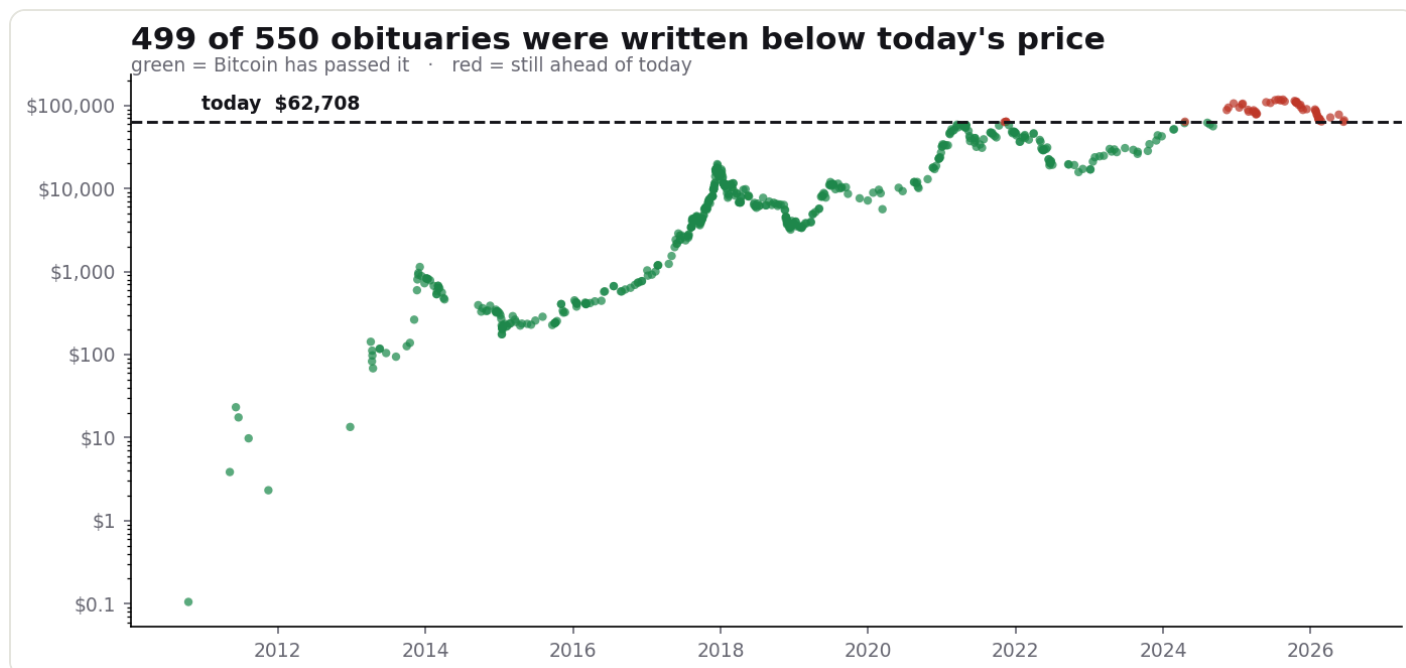

They keep declaring Bitcoin dead

Death calls per year (bars) against Bitcoin's price (line). The obituaries spike when people are scared. The price kept climbing anyway.

The honest part. These headlines do not mark the bottom. They spike whenever people get scared, and the single loudest month of all landed near a top, not a low. They track emotion, not timing. What holds is simpler: over any two-year hold they were usually wrong, and the network they kept burying has never once gone offline.

Nine out of ten were underwater on day one THE SCOREBOARD

Every death call plotted at the price it was written, against today's price (the line). 499 of 550 sit below it.

The one-in-ten that are still ahead of today were almost all written in the last two years, up near the record high before this crash. In other words, the doubters are only "winning" on the calls made at the very top, which is exactly when a doubter is easiest to be.

The fun capstone, told straight. Put $100 into Bitcoin on all 550 death calls and hold, and your $55,000 would be worth about $69 million today. But be honest: about 87% of that is a single 2010 essay written when Bitcoin cost ten cents. Strip that one lucky call out, and the other 549 still turned $54,900 into roughly $8.8 million, about 161 times your money. The point was never one magic buy. It was that betting against the obituaries, over and over, kept paying.

The full list: every obituary and the price that day

Sorted oldest to newest. "Price then" is our verified daily close on the date the obituary ran. "Worth now" is what one dollar bought that day is worth at today's $62,708. Red means that call is still ahead of today (Bitcoin has not yet passed it). One widely-cited tally (99bitcoins) counts 477; this combined list adds the still-updating bitcoindeaths.com archive for 550 distinct obituaries through June 2026.

bitcoin.daily

The data desk that zooms out

You have the receipts now.

Next time a headline tells you it is finally over, you can check it against fifteen years of the exact same headline. The people who zoom in panic. The people who zoom out position. That is the whole difference.

Every morning we publish the one chart and the one number that actually moved Bitcoin, in plain English, no hopium and no fear. If this was useful, that is the whole feed.

Follow @bitcoin.daily for the data nobody else shows you Want the daily desk note and the live cycle read? The link in our bio has the 7-day trial.

Sources: 99bitcoins.com/bitcoin-obituaries and bitcoindeaths.com, de-duplicated; prices are our own daily closes cross-checked to within ~1% of each tracker's pinned price. Compiled July 13, 2026. This document is for education and is not financial advice. Bitcoin is volatile and past results never guarantee the future. The obituaries were wrong before. That is not a promise they always will be.
